Singer/Songwriter Eric Baird has virtually breathed music since he was born. Growing up in a house with a jazz trumpeter/ band director father and classical flutist mother, Baird was surrounded with music. From the time he could walk, he began pounding out rhythms and melodies on anything he could get his hands on. At five, Baird took up the violin, and a few years later discovered the viola and guitar. By the time he was headed to university, Baird's desire to pursue classical music had begun to fade and his guitar playing really started to flourish. It was while playing in a rock band in college that he discovered he could write songs. He then asked God to give him a voice. God did exactly that. This led to a passion for leading worship for various ministry events and performing the songs he had written. Since then, Baird has been leading worship in churches and for mission trips, singing in coffee shops, doing random studio guitar work (including playing on Jonathan Firey's "Acoustic Wedding," and two music videos for the 2008 Olympics), and crafting his songwriting. This has finally culminated in the album, "'Til You Get Here," a collection of songs covering a spectrum of life, love, and faith in a unique style with honest, heartfelt lyrics, and soulful singing and guitar playing.
