Something groovy is happening in a little city called Barrie, Ontario just north of Toronto, Canada. A local grassroots movement of musicians, songwriters, venue owners and recording studios has come together to form a talent incubator in this epic yet unassuming location. Out of this growing music scene, many new artists have emerged, specifically a group of best friends who call themselves The Noolands. Having formed four years ago, this rock and roll four-piece have risen up the ranks and are making some big moves this year in their career. After the success of previous releases, the band has been hard at work finishing up a new batch of music. Recorded at One Star Studios, their new EP Us On A Bus is a reflection of the growth and development of the band's sound and life experience. Their new single Loosey Goosey, which is coming out everywhere March 23rd, is a funky upbeat rock tune that will have you dancing, clapping and singing along almost instantly. The Noolands have given us a copy of their new single to show you all today!

The band's bio describes them as a rock and roll group that writes and records music for their best friends, and that's exactly the vibe you feel when listening to their music. The Noolands (Aaron Casey, Brandon Davenport and the twins James and Jon Laxton) initially started as a co-writing music project with other fellow musicians. However it soon became obvious they these four members had something special, and so they began to work together as a four piece. With the creative juices flowing, and some instant chemistry happening, they decided to quickly record their first single High School T-Shirt in the fall of 2014. They recorded it at Unity Market Café & Studios, a local community hub for the arts, music and social activism, which hosts a wide variety of events and sports an incredible recording facility in the back. The single highlighted a slamming saxophone part written and record by Meghan Poole and sharp witty lyrics that gave the listener just a touch of teenage nostalgia.

After the release of their first single and getting their first couple dozen shows out of the way, they decided to go back to Unity Market Café & Studios to work on their debut EP Generation Why with their long time friend and music producer Joshua Doerksen (AKA Papa Nooland) who had previously produced High School T-Shirt. This collection of five songs was an important process in starting to define their sound as each band members eclectic influences began to come together. The Noolands finished up the EP at the end of 2015, and after their release even got some radio play on local radio station Rock 95. Their focus now was on playing more shows than ever before and making friends with other bands and industry, and that's exactly what they did.

In 2016 The Noolands went back into the studio to record their second single Record Man with music producer Jeff Wardell of Your Productions. Once again the smooth sound of Meghan's saxophone was the highlight of the track. For this single release, the band decided it was time to also produce their first music video. The Record Man music video helped showcase just how much fun these guys are to watch perform, and helped propel the band toward a number of concerts and festivals the following summer. It was something for their fans online that showcased what to expect when seeing the band perform live.

After coming up and building a team as an independent band, The Noolands are proud to announce that they are done working on their new EP Us On A Bus. For this EP, the band wanted to change their sound by finding a producer that understood the direction they wanted to go in. This time the man for the job was Shane Heath, owner of One Star Studios and local tour stop music venue The Foxx Lounge. Whether it was Shane's rock and roll attitude or his blunt ability to push the band to work harder, The Noolands said they felt right at home with Shane and that is clearly evident in the quality of the recordings.

Us on a Bus is set to release April 27th, and represents an exciting the next step in the evolution of this emerging band's journey. The Noolands are building momentum and are definitely a band to keep an eye on over the coming months.
