Growing up in the church and singing in front of people, Brandon Bayles's love affair with music began at a young age. During Junior High School Bayles picked up the drums, but got bored with it quickly without more melody to sing with. This led to his interest in the guitar which he tried learning in High School, but it didn't stick. With much irritation and without much success, Bayles left the guitar alone until his senior year. That year he learned his first song, Wonderwall by Oasis which began his music career. Bayles began playing for his friends around camp fires and eventually leading worship on youth trips. In 2008, Bayles was offered a job as a worship leader at the First United Methodist Church in Alvarado. The band he started playing with helped him put music to songs he had begun writing. Many rough recordings later, a demo ended up in the hands of Tate Music Group. Now excited for the future, Bayles is making his dreams come true one song at a time.
