John Trimmer grew up near Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, and started playing the cello in third grade. A few years later as his interest in music grew, John began to play the piano, and, by the time he graduated from high school, John had developed a love for the music of the sixties and seventies. Especially influenced by artists like The Beatles and Billy Joel, this style complemented his classical training on the cello. Transitioning into college, John began to write songs influenced by these styles, and he also decided to pick up the guitar.

In 2010, John graduated from Bucknell University in Lewisburg, Pennsylvania, with a Bachelor's degree in Civil and Environmental Engineering. He is currently participating in the Peace Corps Master's International Program through the University of South Florida. This program includes a two-year Peace Corps assignment in Uganda and will lead to a Master's degree in Environmental Engineering.

In addition to his love of music, John also enjoys swimming, reading, discussing matters of faith and philosophy and being with friends and family. John has also been involved in service organizations that promote social justice and environmental stewardship. In this spirit, a portion of any profits made by the artist will be donated to charity.
