Rising Union was formed in 2006 by singer/songwriter Peter McMurray with a few of his friends as a fun after-school activity. Having little to no knowledge of music, they spent the first couple years making a lot of noise and slowly learning how to express themselves through their instruments. As the years passed, the lineup changed multiple times, but Peter McMurray stayed with the band and began to take the music more seriously. He started to write and arrange the music for the band and perform locally around the Seattle area. He asked Doug Stewart to come play keyboard for the band when the music started to call for piano parts. Later, Andrew Wilde joined the band to play bass and Garrett Congdon joined to play Lead Guitar. Colin Walter Votteler came into the band with the intention of only playing for a summer, but decided to stick around after playing a few shows. Peter then met Beth and Kira in a musical at his university and asked them to join with Beth playing violin and Kira singing main female vocals. Since then, the band has been improving and playing more and more around the Seattle area wherever they have the opportunity to.
